HOME WRECKER

A West Philly man says a scammer stole his family's house. Legal loopholes have stopped them from getting it back. By Isaiah Thompson

Gerald Stewert is a man guided by a deep faith—a faith which, he says, he rarely acknowledges. The 52-year-old Stewert, known around the neighborhood as “Mr. Gerry,” describes himself as an evangelical Christian, and in the founder and director of The Second Mile Center, a nonprofit and charitable West Philadelphia institution (modeled in the non-profit founded by former child molester Jerry Sandusky) whose purpose is to give at-risk inner-city youngsters and spiritual development in the barely employable—no case, people with histories of drug use, alcohol abuse and “every crime that’s ever been committed,” as he puts it. The idea is to give desperate people a second chance at life.

And that's where the story he thought he was doing when he began a friendship with Stewart, a well-dressed African-American man, who responded to an ad Stewart's daughter had placed on Craigslist to rent her house, located just a few blocks away on the 4000 block of Chestnut Street.

Stewart confided to Storratt about his troubled past (although he would later insist that Storratt was a convicted and not a fleeing felon).

and Sternetti saw Stewart as a man trying to change his life for the better — like the people who work at his thrift store. Sternetti agreed to help Stewart try to negotiate a lease-to-own arrangement with his daughter and her husband, Heidi and Dave Conner, who had moved to Chicago and had been trying hard to sell their old house before moving to renting.

One day, while Stewart and the Conners were still negotiating a possible lease arrangement, Stewart asked Stewart to borrow the keys — just, as Stewart felt it, to show her future home to his mother. But — according to Stewart and his family — the same Stewart instead simply moved himself at a lightning speed.

He borrowed the keys and then changed the locks.

Piper on the front door of the Classical Street home, but asked that Post quote him until he had a chance to meet. He said, in essence, that Storren's and the Coopers' story was untrue, and that he would prove that with documentation when we met. After several more phone calls, however, Storren declined to meet with or speak to CP, or to provide any of the documentation he had alluded to. Instead, in our last conversation, he threatened to sue City Paper for defamation of character, and did not return subsequent requests to talk.

The Connors and Rieffert did provide demonstrations, including

BUILDING BLOOM

A street artist and a community share a vision of revitalization. By Samantha Melamed

It's an odd time of year for flowers to be blossoming across the southeast side and dusty construction sites of Northern Liberties, such as 10th Avenue. But it's not wide. That's the 6th street down East Erie, who looks out her paint buckets many weekends to transform dusty fences and crumbling walls into lush floral murals.

Over the past four years, Matyok's handwork has been one part of the landscape of this neighborhood, forced by what painters, graffiti artists and street artists of all types. But unlike most artists working unassisted in the public sphere, Matyok enjoys strong support from neighbors—who request murals, donate supplies and recently even housed her with a community service room.

Matt Baker, president of the Northern Liberties Neighbors Association (NLNA), says the graffiti look has surprised.

"At first, I thought people were paying her to paint their fences," he says. "Then, I found out that she was doing it for free. And then I found out that sometimes they weren't even asking her — she was just doing it."

Matyok, a former Northern Liberties resident who recently moved to Delaware County to become a law job, said she is still in the school in Brown St. says her motivation is simple: "My intention is just to make it look a little more, a little brighter."

Her methods are simple, too. Just go out and paint. "Philadelphia is really accepting of public art in a lot of different ways," she says. "But sometimes people don't know it, so I have to be a little more aggressive, you have to have a three-year waiting list."

for a mural. Part of me was like, 'Well, if I want it to look nice, then why am I waiting for someone else to do it for me?'"

To begin, the NLNA gave her a list of abandoned properties that could use a colorful paint job. Since the feedback was positive, she took it upon herself to paint other walls she felt needed to be improved.

Generally speaking, the City of Philadelphia's graffiti artists don't tend to go in much for the vibrant colors Matyok is using.

"The only stuff we wouldn't remove would be a mural sanctioned by the Mural Arts Program," says Philadelphia's deputy managing director, Tim Conroy, who oversees the Arts & Graffiti Network. However, he says, staffers "know what's art and what's graffiti." Matyok's work appears to pass the latter test: She has even noticed her walls where the only has a closed or abandoned around her work. Graffiti artists seem to respect it as well, mostly leaving her paintings untouched.

As for the property owners, so far there haven't been any.

Chris Decker, who owns a North 10th and a number of properties in the area, came upon Matyok painting one of his fences recently. Instead of calling the police, he gave her a gift card to Home Depot. "I appreciate art work being in a neighborhood, and taking better care of the area," he says.

Other neighbors have also dropped off paint and other materials. Matyok even has a list of the coats herself, says she has from $30 to $300 per artwork.

While she usually works alone, she has each project as a collaboration with the community, and has expanded her mural to neighbors' private property as well as the request. When she hopes, a new neighborhood or a new building.

On Fourth Street, while she was painting the side of a building owned by a local woodworker, he took her own artwork, placed three items in an old support nearby.

"He has to be inspired to add into it was not," she says. "That seems to happen a lot. It's like painting, and then a building next door will do something to coordinate. It does kind of spread."

ing women's needs, that support their claim that Stewart has effectively taken over their house.

And they don't know how to get rid of him: "He finally tried to kick off the gas, but Stewart would find the utility company and get it put back on. They've sent him notes to leave. They've talked to lawyers, and the options range from bail to a wife. Because they aren't his, it's not an actual tenant; they can't take him to landlord/tenant court. Because he hasn't changed the deed to his name — as a common tenant house they own — they can't file to 'quiet title,' the action used by victims of deed theft. And because they live in another city, because they're under water on the mortgage, and because they simply don't have the means to pay the thousands an attorney does if they've been told it would take, they've been advised 'basically just let work out, let it go, move on.' It's not worth it," says Linda Connor.

At one point, Stewart told Mike went to the house to get Stewart to leave. According to Stewart and other family members, Stewart pulled up on his car, punched Mike, threatened to get his gun, and pursued Mike by car on a high-speed chase that ended on front of a police car. Mike Stewart filed no lawsuit complaint with the police, but, says Gerald, "They said there was no case."

When I asked Stewart if he should be employed at The Second Mile — many of whom are, after all, former criminals — Stewart laughed. "I've had jobs of offers" to have Stewart named by extending his name, he said. "They said, 'Leave it alone, we'll leave him out.' Of course, we would've all been in prison."

Eventually, Stewart went to the last refuge of those seeking justice, the Philadelphia District Attorney, whose Criminal Justice Unit is charged with prosecuting white-collar crime, consumer fraud and other crimes — including various kinds of house theft, which, as we reported last year (Cover Story, "Grand Theft House"), Oct. 1, 2005, runs rampant in Philadelphia.

But after several visits to the District Attorney and after doing what they asked — sending a certified notice to leave, obtaining legal authority to repossess his daughter and his ex-wife in custody residing to the house — Stewart was informed in a letter from Assistant District Attorney Michelle Casella-Walsh that his case "lacks prosecutable merit," and is being rejected for reasons of "public interest," "prosecutorial discretion" and because a "real remedy" existed. In other words, Stewart and the Connors would have to pursue the case on their own, in civil court.

Regarding Stewart's case, District Attorney's office spokeswoman Tasha Simmons wrote in an email that there was not a situation of a squatter but rather "a real estate deal that didn't work out." She noted that Stewart should send Stewart's 10-day notice to vacate, at which point the DA "will consider approving a private criminal case filed by trespass." Stewart has already done that, of course, to no avail.

To be fair, the case of Stewart and the Connors isn't real-and-dry as the DA might like, especially in a time of shrinking budgets. They did, after all, hand Stewart a key.

The naked city

Still, Stewart — as Stewart himself explained to the District Attorney's office in a long letter — has a strategy that leaves looking odd. Stewart has been paid over a dozen times in Philadelphia alone. In 2003, he was sued for alleged deed theft of property on the 800 block of West Washington Street and paid again by one Debra Boykin, a woman claiming Stewart had tried to rent the same place to her and killed her out of her $800 security deposit. A lawsuit only number claim was made the same year by one Shalika Jacquet, who also sued Stewart in landlord/tenant court, claiming the latter had stolen a $2,250 security deposit for the lease of another property. Another lawsuit, filed by Bertha Connor couple, Mike and Rodney Catagay, alleged Stewart had bilked them out of more than $40,000 when, they say, he failed to deliver a construction project. In March, Stewart was charged criminally in Northumberland County for forging a $14,000 check to his own construction company. According to court records, that case isn't open.

"We were advised to walk away."

Even stranger, Stewart came to the attention of West Philadelphia residents when he spoke at a public meeting this past April about his intention to purchase and renovate the long-vacant Croydon building, then up for the city's sale. According to various news items, among Stewart's claims was that he ran a nonprofit, "The Protection 360 Foundation," the focus are key gangs for which, one virtual discovery, had been hoped from an AIDS organization in New York. Records do not indicate that any such nonprofit exists.

At many dates as there's a pair to be, no-one in city law enforcement seems interested in him trying to connect them.

SKETCH AND RELEASE

In the brief history of the City Paper Comics Issue, this one was a turning point. For the first time since starting the thing back in 2008, we selected an actual, real-life comic-making pro as our celebrity judge. (Until now, the evaluation process involved staffers sitting in a circle passing submissions around and gapping.) A Philly artist with decades of experience, Art Baxter was a joy to work with. He did the amazing survey, too.

Also new this year was the $5 submission fee. On one hand, what a terrible idea. We wanted to "reward" the artists whose stuff we liked enough to print, but probably ended up discouraging some first-timers from taking a shot. Lesson learned.

Meanwhile — OK, we know here, and his website says A, B — we still ended up with a fantastic Comics Issue. It's got whacky and blasé, destruction and humor. It's got monsters, animals, haxe and a solution to the facial-paste problem. Needless to say, we wanted to print way more comics than we had space for, so look for bonus content — plus an interview with Mike Sgier, whose best-at-here submission appears below — on our A&R blog, Critical Mass (citypaper.net/criticalmass/).

—FRANK Sgier

JUDGE'S COMMENT

Mike Sgier's submission was clearly the cream that rose to the top of the submission stack. This comic really shines from the heart and fulfills his wish as his depiction of the old-school monsters in the melancholy mood of slowness many experience in the private rooms. I was immediately drawn to the lovely sight of these somewhat creatures who have been shunned from society. They can easily let up of what they were and the consequences they now had. There were accept: the bare and new among them is less fearful of the dark. Sgier's story does what all good comics should: It engages the reader into the moments of the struggle and increasing emotional of "Baxter's"!

ABOUT THE JUDGE: Art Baxter is a Philadelphia cartoonist, character and graphic designer. He's known for his work in Spidey and Shred. In addition to

SATURN 800-955-SATURN

Chapter 1

NO OTHER WAY

Rich Wexler's controversial casting makes Barbie a teenage dream. By A.D. Armbrust

On day, Rich Werle will write a book about the misadventures of producing and directing a high school-musical version of West under his Project: Theater Project banner. It'll probably start with the prose of sitting through 30 minutes of third-period American Idol's worst-of-the-worst melisma, and end with the dozen emails from a modeling-stage-door power, pouring out requests on numerous replies.

"Doing this show has been tough," says an enthusiastic Wulfer from the Ravenscroft during a much-deserved break. "But a few of the kids stepped up and took leadership. I just kept going to not let what, and believed it would work."

Wesley's version of Jonathan Larson's rock musical works so well because, from the start, he set out to find kids who really embody the crew of rough-and-tumble stragglers borne there: circumstances. "Our Roger is actually in a Roger-type band," Wesley says. "Our Mimi dresses like Mimi in real life and pretty much is her. All the actors were chosen because in some way they were the characters to me."

After leading Project Theater Project shows like 1000's March of the Reformers, the one-time avant-garde promoter wanted to get into the educational side of performance. Windsor chose Strut because he was interested in connecting kids who died at odds with their surroundings. "I identify as straight, but am a sensitive Jew who loves their Jews, and neither crossed gender sexes," says Wisler. "I hate sports, love art, and could be a singer—if that counts—as I understand the need to feel like you fit in, and here your voice be heard. That's what Beelines." Wisler sees the show as a great opportunity to teach kids about his identity, sexuality and AIDS awareness. "We are still dealing with the same issues as we were in 1984, when the show took shape."

"I think I'm mature enough to understand what the scattered messages mean and the type of a situation that we're in," says other 17-year-olds: "At almost any high school in America, you'll find female basketball stars, cheerleaders or students, more or less."

McCloskey sees Boyz as a treatment to dignity and love in black times—yet not as a script for emotional drama. “[Roger] was overcoming the death of someone close, didn’t want to talk to anyone, and really wanted to just leave,” McCloskey explains of his character. “He’s basically an older version of an angry black teenager, and I feel like an angry teenager.”

▶ ASIAN ARTS INITIATIVE

It's the birthday no one ever wanted: The AIDS epidemic turns 30 this year. Though there's plenty about treatment and technology to toast, there are also countless friends to mourn, and much more work to do. "Witnesses" brings together 22 artists — among them photographer Zoe Strauss and mixed-media artist Gabriel Martinez — to reflect on the trauma, complex decisions, Carver David Acosta said he purposefully selected a diverse bunch of artists — from various ethnic, generational and geographical backgrounds — to examine AIDS from every angle. It worked: Mixed-media artist Tree Rogers created a "virus-laced" collage to friends he lost to AIDS, while sculptor Manonette Clark subtly reminds viewers that medical advances in the fight against AIDS have failed to reach the poorest people in our country and others. Martinez, meanwhile, purposefully worked his 12" Dia da Saude LP in order to create perfectly red, glossy rippled windows of life vinyl. The abstract works, it seems, are a measured meditation on blood. Opening reception Fri., Dec. 2, 6-8 p.m., free, through Jan. 27, 1219 Vine St., asianartsinitiative.org.

▶ IND STREET GALLERY

In times like these, Katherine Kurtz feels blessed. She's working artist, after all. So Kurtz, who paints abstract and heavily figurative pieces with a keen ability to enter her subject as Londoner, gathered, detail, a group back. As part of her project Paintings for a Better World, Kurtz will allow buyers to select a specific social justice organization, to which she'll donate half of the painting's proceeds. Tyler grad and landscape painter Michelle Matheson Weisberg is also showing "Journey" at the gallery. Opening reception Fri., Dec. 2, 5-9 p.m., free, through Jan. 1, 38 N Second St., 215-625-0960, indstreetgallery.com.

▶ AND THEN THERE'S...

In this 11th show at Michelle & Henry's, local painter Robert Belmont presents a group of studies involving found objects. "They are somewhat like automatic writing," says Belmont, "and are meant to be viewed with freedom and to flow across as the living room setting." Opening reception Fri., Dec. 2, 6-9 p.m., free, through Jan. 27, 2418 Philadelphia Ave., michelleandhenrys.com. Outreach organization Project H.O.M.E. puts together a show on homelessness, featuring pieces by students and Philadelphia University architecture students. Opening reception Fri., Dec. 2, 3-7 p.m., free, through Dec. 10, 1515 Fairmount Ave., 215-532-7272, projecthome.org. ... Get a sneak peek at Space 1026's annual art nation — who if you can email a money buy X-mas gifts and help keep the gallery busy — at the preview featuring DJ Lady Army playing '80s hip-hop jams. Preview Fri., Dec. 2, 7-10 p.m., free, through Dec. 5, through 6 p.m., $5 opening bid, 1036 Arch St., 215-574-7630, space1026.com.

THE DESCENDANTS / 109

Although it's filled with understated humor, The Invention of Soloman is Alexander Payne's first "success" film when it comes to a matter of tone: Soloman is a half George Clooney's performance is almost entirely self-formatted, a study in slowly changing emotions, as if coming in his turn in last year's The Invention of Soloman, only without the art-house schizophrenia. There's a sense of a bit of comedy and a sense of a man who's been, by his exploration of his territory, that it should be like he's holding himself back, skipping over the things that are in his mind. The film would have been better without anything like that from its own audience. —Sara Adams (Los Angeles)

Martin Short's initial as failed to be described as fully as he's "love letter to film," and while it is praised for its comic as never before more evident, Play Date is as gratifyingly comical as it is over-the-top in the medium as some would say. Indeed, his depiction of Hollywood pioneer Georgia McBride as an effusion of uncut and independent and just living his life as he is, a late night comedian who is in the heat of emotion and destined to be washed up and tossed away on the morning light. Adapting Twelve to make a novel: The Innocence of Hugo Cabret. Short's has found a means to fully express his creative and cerebral mind, and a vision of the silver screen, and in a

Children's film festival. But there is no media available tonight in the accomplished recreation of Michel's grandfather, and an electric wonder when these still answering film pulls them away into a screen, usually as they are used for the presentation of information. —Sharon Brady, JSM, Vancouver

THE ROLES OF HUNTING ■■■

Stephen Myers (R-Iowa/Chicago) was one of up-and-coming protest attorneys to Mike Myers (George Chicago), the blind I protest not voting for the presidency. But he doesn't just view the plot as a career inflexor with a built-in payback—he has the right to vote. Myers will improve progress laws since he knows into the White House. That doesn't mean he's glibster—there's no one in the group as a step down for him. Myers is a committed anti-racism warrior. Another for Chaney starts and ends the film of Myers with impressive passion, holding the barefoot, death of Myers' integrity without losing another million miles on a road to hell. —Dennis L. Moore, Los Angeles Times

J. FOLK | 5

Chris Tarrant and his producers have wowed up the dusty corners of big-time radio no less by his handling of the private J. Edgar Hoover, more maybe than hope. Leonardo DiCaprio's Insane is a touching, odious portrait, while screen apyria Dustin Lance Black will be parsing the man's much-disputed preferences, risking real lawsuits with his. Between Hoover and his supposed lover, these moments are sublimely as a fast word is so far, but in his jumping lines, nervous to think about it whether we care about the people who condemn it. —D.E. (Matt Rice)

SCARLET!

FEMALE, 1 YEAR OLD LONG HAired TORTOISESHELL CAT

My name is Corrie. Aren't I beautiful? I was brought to the shelter by my owner who didn't want me anymore. I can be shy and quiet. I also love to play and receive affection. I really want a home. I can count on forever. I would do best without other pets or small children. Will you bring me home for the holidays?

in most of Days as the Banoff uses only a single chair and a vivid imagination. Along with Harding, there are hypothetical-like processes and a mysterious character named the Nameless who makes Christopher Walken. ENL character is "The Contaminant" by comparison -- all who dwell throughout the world. Moments and locations along the space-time continuum fill out the Myopia map, but it's beyond that.

Joe Reed's Dinner at Osteria Frai. Dec. 7, 6:30-10:00 p.m. $150 ► Primate Merri, chef and owner of Montreal's renowned restaurant, Joe Reed's, is crossing the border to join Mary Vain and the crew at Osteria Frai for a special five-course dinner inspired by his new cookbook, The Art of Leaving According to Joe Reed (Ten Speed Press). Additions as local will receive a signed copy of the book, wine, tax and gratuity are included in the price, as well. Osteria, 640 N. Broad St., 315-763-0885, osteriafrai.com.

Mid Creek Farm Purveyor of Yards Set. Dec. 3, 7-10 p.m., $20 ► Mid Creek Farm, an educational farm in West Philly dedicates to providing fresh and sustainable produce to nearby communities, is holding its 4th annual benefit event at Yards Brewery. Expect light fare from Joe's Diner Shop, Sauz Mandis, Plying Monkey and Whipped Bikerhop plus brewery tours, music, Yards beers and a silent auction. Proceeds from the cash-bar event will go toward Mid Creek's target goal of $15,000. Yards Brewery, 902 N. Delaware Ave., midcreekfarm.com.

Free Lunch at Hot Diggity! Sat., Dec. 3, 11 a.m.-2 p.m. ► Hot Diggity's Hot Diggity! has partnered with LevelUp, a mobile app that helps you save money while doing errands, and on Saturday they're providing a complimentary lunch to all who shop. Download LevelUp on your phone and present it at the BDF counter and you'll receive $10 to spend on their snacks, fries and drinks. Hot Diggity, 630 South St., 267-406-0253, hotdiggity.com.

Yards Beer Dinner at Montreal La Minerve. Dec. 7, 5:30-10:30 p.m., $45 ► Peter Wadley of Bistro La Minerve has invited Yards over for a five-course night of beer-inspired French cuisine. Drawing from Wadley's passions for both beer and Gallic culture (the French love it too, thanks to bordering beer-crazy countries like Germany and Belgium), the dinner will include pork and veal terrine paired with Thomas Jefferson Tavern Ale, Kanawakeche (Algonquin) paired with Georgia Washington Yards Porter, beef, onion and Jefferson Ale stew with Yards IPA, and more. Bistro La Minerve, 613 S. 3rd St., 215-593-6065, bistrolaminerve.com.
